Conclusions

- Half of likely voters favor a temporary extension of Proposition 30—only a third support making the tax increases permanent.
- Drought remains the top concern, but an increasing share say residents’ response is the right amount.
- Half view crime in California as a big problem, express confidence in local government to handle prison realignment.
- Californians are much more likely to approve of their own representatives than to approve of Congress overall.
- Two in three Californians—including majorities across parties—prefer legal status for undocumented immigrants.
- Half think abortion should be legal in any or most circumstances.
