

PARTICIPANTS

Henry Brady is dean of the Goldman School of Public Policy and Class of 1941 Monroe Deutsch Professor of Political Science and Public Policy at the University of California, Berkeley. He has worked for the federal Office of Management and Budget and other organizations in Washington, DC. He is past president of the American Political Science Association, past president of the Political Methodology Society of the American Political Science Association, and has served as director of the University of California's Survey Research Center. His most recent book is The Unheavenly Chorus: Unequal Political Voice and the Broken Promise of American Democracy. He has also published numerous articles on political participation and methodology, the dynamics of public opinion, and other topics. He was elected a fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences in 2003 and a fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science in 2006. He holds a PhD in economics and political science from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Hans Johnson is a senior and Bren fellow at PPIC. His work focuses on the dynamics of population change in California and policy implications of the state's changing demography, with a focus on higher education. At PPIC, he has conducted research on education projections and workforce skills, population projections, international and domestic migration, and housing. Before joining PPIC, he was senior demographer at the California Research Bureau, where he conducted research on population issues for the state legislature and the governor's office. He has also worked as a demographer at the California Department of Finance, specializing in population projections. He holds a PhD in demography from the University of California, Berkeley.

Patrick Murphy is director of research and a senior fellow at PPIC, where he holds the Thomas C. Sutton Chair in Policy Research. His research focuses on education financing and management in both K–12 and higher education. Most recently, he has examined the potential for state education agencies to play a more active role in improving student outcomes. He is also professor of politics at the University of San Francisco. Previously, he worked for the RAND Corporation and at the Office of Management and Budget in Washington, DC. He holds a PhD from the University of Wisconsin–Madison and a master's of public affairs from the University of Texas–Austin.

Nancy Shulock is the former executive director of the Institute for Higher Education Leadership & Policy (IHELP), where she focused on understanding student success in higher education and improving state public policy. She has authored numerous reports and articles on higher education policy and performance, finance policy, community college student success, transfer policy, accountability, policy analysis, strategic planning, and legislative decisionmaking. Prior to the establishment of IHELP in 2001, she was associate vice president for finance and then associate vice president for academic affairs at Sacramento State University. She began her state policy career with the California Legislative Analyst's office, where she worked on K–12 and higher education issues. She holds a PhD in political science from the University of California, Davis, an MPP from the University of California, Berkeley, and a BA from Princeton University, where she majored in history.

Amy Supinger is a Sacramento-based consultant focused on California fiscal and policy matters, with an emphasis on higher education policy and finance. One of her clients is the Lumina Foundation, for whom she serves as a California policy advisor. She has more than 20 years of experience and skills. She was a consultant with the Senate Committee on Budget and Fiscal Review, serving for more than a decade as an advisor to the California State Senate on all matters related to postsecondary education finance. Previously, she served as the chief consultant to the Assembly Committee on Higher Education and as a budget analyst at the Department of Finance. She earned her master's in public policy and administration from California State University, Sacramento, and her BA from the University of California, Santa Barbara.