Conclusions

- Newsom remains the top choice, while Cox and Villaraigosa vie for the second spot on November’s general election ballot.
- Feinstein continues to lead de León; most Republicans and independents are undecided.
- Governor Brown’s final budget receives positive reviews and overwhelming majorities like his idea of additional one-time spending.
- Californians distrust the state and federal government; they have even less trust in the federal government.
- Majorities across the state continue to view immigrants as a benefit, amid local tensions about federal and state roles in immigration enforcement.
- Californians are divided on the motivation of the Russia investigation, but a growing share think the Russian government tried to influence the election.
