Kayla Granados is a research administrator at the Public Policy Institute of California. She provides administrative support for the PPIC Water Policy Center and the institute’s research team. Previously, she served as an AmeriCorps member, volunteering at a college-readiness program for low-income first-generation high school girls. She holds a BA in sociology from Cal Poly, San Luis Obispo, with minors in psychology and political science.