PPIC STATEWIDE SURVEY: CALIFORNIANS AND THEIR GOVERNMENT

Most Californians Favor Governor's First Budget

IMMIGRATION SEEN AS TOP ISSUE, FEW SEE BORDER SITUATION AS A CRISIS

SAN FRANCISCO, February 6, 2019—Majorities of Californians support Governor Newsom's first proposed budget, which increases spending on K–14 education, higher education, and health and human services. This is among the key findings of a statewide survey released today by the Public Policy Institute of California (PPIC).

When read a summary of the governor's 2019–20 proposed budget, 70 percent of all California adults and 64 percent of likely voters favor the spending plan. Large majorities support two key components of the governor's proposal: 77 percent of adults and 72 percent of likely voters favor allocating $1.8 billion to expand pre-kindergarten and early childhood programs and facilities, while 78 percent of adults and 70 percent of likely voters support an $832 million funding increase for public colleges and universities.

"Governor Newsom's first budget proposal is highly popular among Californians, and there is overwhelming support for his plans to increase funding for preschool and higher education," said Mark Baldassare, PPIC president and CEO.

The survey also asks which of the four major areas of state spending should have the highest priority: K–12 public education, health and human services, higher education, or prisons and corrections. Californians are most likely to choose K–12 education (46%), followed by health and human services (32%), higher education (16%), and prisons and corrections (4%).

Immigration Seen as Top Issue for State Leaders to Address

Asked what the most important issue is for the governor and legislature to address in the coming year, more Californians name immigration and illegal immigration (15% adults, 18% likely voters) than any other issue. Additional issues mentioned by more than 5 percent of Californians are education (11% adults, 11% likely voters), jobs and the economy (10% adults, 8% likely voters), the environment (8% adults, 8% likely voters), and homelessness (6% adults, 7% likely voters).

Just 27 percent of Californians say the situation with illegal immigration across the US-Mexico border is a crisis, while 45 percent say it is a serious problem but not a crisis. A similar share of adults nationwide (24%) called the situation a crisis in a January ABC/Washington Post poll.

A strong majority of Californians (69%) oppose building a wall along the entire border with Mexico, while 28 percent favor doing so. Nationwide, a January CNN poll found that a majority of adults (56%) opposed building a wall and 39 percent were in favor.

The survey also asks Californians their views on the state of racial divisions in the US more generally: 45 percent say race relations are worse than they were a year ago, while only 20 percent say they are better and 34 percent say they are about the same. Two-thirds of African Americans (66%) in California say race relations are getting worse, as do 45 percent of both Latinos and whites and 38 percent of Asian Americans.

“Building a wall along the US-Mexico border continues to be an unpopular idea, while many Californians say that the state of race relations in America has gotten worse in the last year,” Baldassare said.

Most Blame President, Republicans in Congress for Shutdown

Most Californians believe President Trump and Republicans in Congress were primarily responsible for the recent partial shutdown of the federal government. A strong majority (64%) say the president and Republicans in Congress were responsible, compared with just 24 percent saying Democrats in Congress were responsible. Nationwide, 53 percent of adults blamed Trump and Republicans, while 29 percent blamed Democrats, according to a January ABC/Washington Post poll.

Majority Are Optimistic Governor, Legislature Can Work Together

Two-thirds of Californians (67% adults, 65% likely voters) are optimistic that the new governor and the legislature will be able to work together and accomplish a lot in the next year. Majorities of Democrats (79%) and independents (59%) believe Governor Newsom and the legislature will be able to work together, as do 44 percent of Republicans.

“In the wake of the election, there are sky-high expectations that Governor Newsom and the Democratic-controlled legislature will be able to work together and accomplish a lot in 2019,” Baldassare said.

With Newsom in office for less than a month, 44 percent of adults and 43 percent of likely voters approve of the way he is handling his job, while 33 percent of adults and 29 percent of likely voters say they don’t know or have not heard enough to have an opinion yet. This is similar to Governor Brown’s approval rating when he took office in January 2011 (41% adults, 47% likely voters).

As the 2019–20 legislative session gets underway, about half of adults (49%) and 46 percent of likely voters approve of the way the California Legislature is handling its job. This is similar to the legislature’s approval rating from last January (51% adults, 50% likely voters).

When asked who should make the tough choices involved in the state budget this year, overwhelming majorities of Californians (77% adults, 78% likely voters) want voters to make some of the decisions. This is consistent with the large share of Californians—always at least three in four—expressing this view on PPIC surveys since 2011.

Mixed Views on “Split Roll” Change to Proposition 13

Proposition 13, which limits property taxes in California, is viewed favorably, with 61 percent of adults and 64 percent of likely voters saying it has been mostly a good thing for the state. A ballot measure eligible for the 2020 ballot would ease the strict limits that Proposition 13 places on commercial property taxes without changing its provisions for residential properties. Californians are divided on having commercial properties taxed according to their current market value. Slightly less than half (47%) favor this change, 43 percent oppose, and 10 percent don’t know. Likely voters hold similar views: 49 percent favor the change, 43 percent oppose, and 8 percent don’t know. A majority of Democrats approve (58%), while 49 percent of independents and 37 percent of Republicans do.

“Majorities of Californians continue to say that Proposition 13 has been a good thing for California, while the split roll property tax reform draws mixed reviews across party lines,” Baldassare said.

The survey also asks about Californians’ understanding of state finances. Asked to name the largest source of state revenue, a third (33% adults, 34% likely voters) correctly say personal income taxes.

Optimism about Direction of State, Pessimism about Nation

A majority of Californians are optimistic about where the state is headed, with 55 percent of adults and 51 percent of likely voters saying things are going in the right direction. However, views vary across racial/ethnic groups and party affiliations. Majorities of Asian Americans (71%), Latinos (62%), and African Americans (57%), but less than half of whites (47%), believe California is going in the right direction. More than three-fourths of Democrats (79%) hold this view, while far fewer independents (41%) and Republicans (18%) do.

In contrast with overall optimism about where the state is headed, Californians are pessimistic about the direction of the country. Slightly less than a third of adults (30%) and likely voters (29%) say things are going in the right direction nationally. There is dramatic variation across racial/ethnic groups. Only 6 percent of African Americans in California say things in the US are going in the right direction, far less than among whites (30%), Latinos (32%), and Asian Americans (37%). A majority of Republicans (57%), but far fewer independents (30%) and Democrats (15%), say the country is headed in the right direction.

Record-Low Expectations of Trump, Congress Working Together

As President Trump starts his third year in office, only 30 percent of California adults and 36 percent of likely voters approve of how he is handling his job. Just 34 percent of adults and 23 percent of likely voters approve of Congress.

With Democrats now controlling the House of Representatives, a record-low 25 percent of California adults, and even fewer likely voters (18%), say President Trump and Congress will be able to work together and accomplish a lot this year. Still, when asked about political divisions among Americans more generally, a majority of Californians (58%) are optimistic that people of different political views can work out their differences.

Just under half of adults (48%) and 50 percent of likely voters approve of how House Speaker Nancy Pelosi is handling her job. This is higher than House Minority Leader Kevin McCarthy's job approval rating (32% adults, 28% likely voters). However, 38 percent of adults and 36 percent of likely voters say they don't know or have not heard enough about McCarthy to have an opinion yet.

"As further evidence of the political fallout from the federal government shutdown, expectations for the president and Congress working together have never been lower," Baldassare said. "Californians are much more likely to approve of Speaker Pelosi than President Trump or Minority Leader McCarthy."

Most Expect Some Changes from New Democratic Majority in House

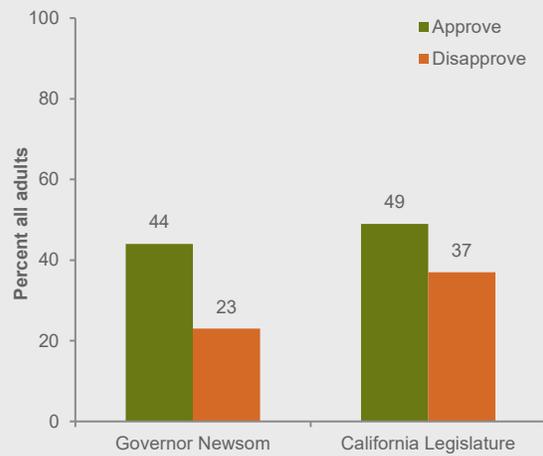

While Californians are generally pessimistic about where the country is headed, many expect that Democratic control of the US House of Representatives will bring some change to how things are going. Two-thirds of adults (66%) think that the Democrats gaining a House majority in the midterm elections will lead to either a lot of change (28%) or some change (38%) in the way things are going in the country. Majorities across parties expect some change, but Democrats (81%) are far more likely than independents (59%) and Republicans (58%) to expect change.

Approval Ratings of State Elected Officials

With Gavin Newsom in office less than a month, a plurality of Californians (44% adults, 43% likely voters) say they approve of the way that he is handling his job as governor, while about three in ten say they do not know or haven't heard enough to have an opinion yet. Governor Brown's approval rating was similar when he entered office in January 2011 (41% adults, 47% likely voters). Today, a majority of Democrats (63%) but fewer independents (37%) and Republicans (16%) approve of Governor Newsom. A majority in the San Francisco Bay Area (52%) approve, compared to fewer in other regions. Majorities of Asian Americans (53%), African Americans (52%), and Latinos (51%)—and fewer than half of whites (37%)—approve.

“Overall, from what you know so far, do you approve or disapprove of the way that Gavin Newsom is handling his job as governor of California?”

As the 2019–20 legislative session begins, 49 percent of adults and 46 percent of likely voters approve of the way the California Legislature is handling its job. Californians' approval of the state legislature was similar in December (47% adults, 43% likely voters) and last January (51% adults, 50% likely voters). Today, a majority of Democrats (69%) approve, while fewer independents (38%) and Republicans (22%) approve. Majorities in the San Francisco Bay Area (55%) and Los Angeles (54%) approve, compared to fewer in other regions. Majorities of Asian Americans (64%), African Americans (60%), and Latinos (57%) approve of the way that the legislature is handling its job, compared to fewer whites (38%).

Top Issues, Prospects of State Leaders Working Together in 2019

Californians name immigration and illegal immigration (15% adults, 18% likely voters) as the most important issue for the governor and legislature to work on in 2019. Other issues that were each mentioned by more than 5 percent of Californians include education (11% adults, 11% likely voters), jobs and the economy (10% adults, 8% likely voters), the environment (8% adults, 8% likely voters), and homelessness (6% adults, 7% likely voters).

Last January, Californians were about as likely as they are today to name immigration (20% adults, 23% likely voters), jobs and the economy (9% adults, 8% likely voters), and education, schools, and teachers (8% adults, 7% likely voters) as the most important issues for the governor and legislature to work on. The proportion of Californians who mention the state budget (5% adults, 8% likely voters) as the most important issue for state leaders to work on is similar to last January (7% adults, 9% likely voters).

Across regions, immigration is mentioned most frequently in the Central Valley, Orange/San Diego, and the San Francisco Bay Area. Los Angeles residents are the most likely to mention education, while Inland Empire residents mention immigration, jobs and the economy, and education equally often. Across parties, immigration is mentioned most often by Republicans (36%) and education is mentioned most often by Democrats (14%); independents are equally likely to mention education (14%) and immigration (14%).

“Which one issue facing California today do you think is the most important for the governor and state legislature to work on in 2019?”

Top 5 issues	All adults	Region					Likely voters
		Central Valley	Inland Empire	Los Angeles	Orange/San Diego	San Francisco Bay Area

Homelessness	6	5	7	6	4	7	7

In the 2018 election, the Democrats maintained control of the governor’s office and gained legislative seats, giving them more than a two-thirds majority in both the state senate and assembly. Two in three Californians (67% adults, 65% likely voters) say they think that Governor Newsom and the state legislature will be able to work together and accomplish a lot in the next year. Californians were slightly less likely to hold this view in January 2018 (60% adults, 58% likely voters); fewer held this view when Governor Brown entered office in January 2011 (58% adults, 52% likely voters). Today, majorities of Democrats (79%) and independents (59%)—and fewer Republicans (44%)—hold this view. At least six in ten across regions and across age, education, gender, income, and racial/ethnic groups expect that Governor Newsom and the state legislature will be able to work together and accomplish a lot in 2019.

“Do you think that Governor Newsom and the state legislature will be able to work together and accomplish a lot in the next year, or not?”

State of the State

Majorities of adults (55%) and likely voters (51%) say that things in California are generally going in the right direction. Californians had similar perceptions in December (54% adults, 50% likely voters) and last January (57% adults, 54% likely voters). Today, a majority of Democrats (79%) say that things in California are going in the right direction; far fewer independents (41%) and Republicans (18%) hold this view. Six in ten in the San Francisco Bay Area (64%) and Los Angeles (61%) say things are going in the right direction, compared to fewer in other regions. Majorities of Asian Americans (71%), Latinos (62%), and African Americans (57%)—and fewer whites (47%)—think that California is generally going in the right direction.

About half of adults (49%) and 45 percent of likely voters say that the state will have good times financially during the next 12 months. Californians had similar perceptions in December (46% adults, 46% likely voters), while more had optimistic views last January (56% adults, 56% likely voters). Today, a majority of Democrats (54%)—and fewer independents (42%) and Republicans (35%)—are optimistic. A majority in the San Francisco Bay Area (56%) are optimistic, while fewer hold this view in other regions. Majorities of Latinos (60%) and Asian Americans (53%) expect good times, compared to fewer whites (42%) and African Americans (41%).

Knowledge of the State Budget

On January 10, Governor Newsom proposed a 2019–20 state budget that includes approximately $144.2 billion in General Fund expenditures. About 90 percent of General Fund spending in the proposed budget is allocated for K–12 public education (40.7%, $58.7 billion), health and human services (28.0%, $40.3 billion), higher education (11.9%, $17.2 billion), and corrections and rehabilitation (8.7%, $12.5 billion). When asked to identify the largest area of state spending, about one in three name either health and human services (35% adults, 35% likely voters) or prisons and corrections (33% adults, 32% likely voters); fewer name K–12 public education (16% adults, 20% likely voters) and about one in ten say higher education (10% adults, 8% likely voters). The perception of K–12 public education has been similar in our other January surveys in this decade (16% 2010, 2011, 2012; 17% 2014; 15% 2015, 2016; 16% 2017; 16% today) and has not risen above 30 percent since we began asking this question in May 2005. Today, the perception that K–12 public education is the largest spending area is similar among Democrats (18%), Republicans (18%), and independents (20%). Across demographic groups, awareness is highest among whites (19%), college graduates (20%), men (20%), those 55 and older (18%), and those with annual incomes of $80,000 or more (20%).

“I’m going to name some of the largest areas for state spending. Please tell me the one that represents the most spending in the state budget.”

K–12 public education	16	18	18	20	20
Higher education	10	13	5	8	8
Don’t know	5	4	7	3	4

When it comes to identifying the largest state revenue source, 33 percent of adults and 34 percent of likely voters correctly choose the personal income tax. The share of adults identifying the personal income tax has been similar in our January surveys since 2010 (28% 2010; 29% 2011, 2012; 26% 2014; 33% 2015; 33% today). Today, fewer than one in four say sales taxes (23% adults, 22% likely voters), corporate taxes (22% adults, 24% likely voters), or motor vehicle fees (17% adults, 15% likely voters). About one in three Republicans (35%), Democrats (32%), and independents (32%) correctly identify personal income tax as the state’s top revenue source. Regionally, awareness is highest in Orange/San Diego (42%) and lowest in the Central Valley and Los Angeles (29% each). Awareness is highest among Asian Americans (40%), college graduates (38%), those under 35 (35%), and those with incomes over $80,000 (41%). Only 8 percent of adults and 9 percent of likely voters identify both K–12 public education and the personal income tax as the top spending and revenue areas.

State Budget Situation

A plurality of Californians (46% adults, 49% likely voters) think that K–12 public education should be the highest priority when it comes to state spending. Three in ten choose health and human services (32% adults, 30% likely voters), while one in six say higher education (16% adults, 15% likely voters) and fewer say prisons and corrections (4% adults, 4% likely voters). Similar shares of Californians named K–12 public education as the top priority for state spending in January 2017 (44% adults, 49% likely voters). Today, at least half of independents (53%) and Republicans (50%) and 43 percent of Democrats say that K–12 public education should be the top priority. Residents in the San Francisco Bay Area (55%), the Central Valley (49%), the Inland Empire (45%), and Los Angeles (45%) are more likely than those in Orange/San Diego (34%) to say K–12 public education should be the top priority. Across racial/ethnic groups, whites (49%) are the most likely and African Americans (36%) are the least likely to hold this view. Parents of children 18 or under are more likely than others to say K–12 public education should be the top priority (56% to 40%). The share who say K–12 public education should be the top priority rises with increasing education and income levels.

“Thinking about these four areas of state spending, I’d like you to name the one you think should have the highest priority when it comes to state government spending.”

When asked who should make the tough choices involved in the state budget, Californians overwhelmingly prefer that voters make some decisions about spending and taxes at the ballot box (77% adults, 78% likely voters); only one in five would prefer that the governor or legislature make all these decisions (19% adults, 18% likely voters). In periodic surveys since 2011, at least three in four Californians have preferred that voters have a say. Today, majorities across parties prefer that voters have a say, while Republicans (86%) are somewhat more likely than independents (77%) or Democrats (75%) to hold this view. At least seven in ten across demographic groups and regions hold this view. Central Valley and Orange/San Diego residents (81% each) are the most likely to prefer that voters have a say, followed by those in the Inland Empire (80%), Los Angeles (74%), and the San Francisco Bay Area (72%).

“When it comes to the tough choices involved in the state budget this year, would you prefer that the governor and legislature make all of the decisions about spending and taxes, or that California voters make some of the decisions about spending and taxes at the ballot box?”

Governor’s Proposed Budget

When he unveiled his 2019–20 proposed state budget on January 10, Governor Newsom estimated a one-time surplus of $21.5 billion for the state. Nonetheless, 40 percent of Californians say the state budget situation is a big problem. Similar shares of Californians (43%) held this view last January. Across parties, 69 percent of Republicans say the budget situation is a big problem, while fewer independents (45%) and Democrats (26%) say the same. Regionally, Inland Empire residents (48%) are the most likely to hold this view (42% Orange/San Diego, 38% San Francisco Bay Area, 37% Central Valley, 37% Los Angeles).

“Do you think the state budget situation in California—that is, the balance between government spending and revenues—is a big problem, somewhat of a problem, or not a problem for the people of California today?”

	All adults	Party			Likely voters

Somewhat of a problem	38	52	23	38	38
Not a problem	18	20	6	14	16

Governor Newsom’s budget proposes increased spending on K–14, higher education, and health and human services. It would allocate $4 billion to eliminate budgetary debts and reverse the deferrals of past decades, as well as $1.8 billion in additional funds to bring the rainy day fund to $15.3 billion. After being read a brief description, 70 percent of Californians and 64 percent of likely voters are in favor. Most Democrats (83%) and six in ten independents (62%) favor the plan; one in three Republicans (35%) hold this view. Majorities across regions and demographic groups favor the budget plan, but support is lower in Orange/San Diego (60%) and among whites (61%), those 55 and older (63%), and those with household incomes more than $80,000 (64%). Among those who call the state budget situation a big problem, 52 percent are in favor of the governor’s budget proposal.

As part of his budget plan, the governor proposes allocating $1.8 billion to expand pre-kindergarten and early childhood programs and facilities. After hearing a brief description of this proposal, more than seven in ten adults (77%) and likely voters (72%) are in favor. Democrats (89%) are much more likely than independents (70%) and Republicans (47%) to favor this proposal. More than two in three across regions and demographic groups are in favor.

Governor Newsom also proposed an increase of $832 million for public colleges and universities, including policies aimed at increasing enrollment and degree completion, a tuition freeze, and two free years of community college for first-time, full-time students. After hearing a brief description of the governor’s higher education funding proposal, 78 percent of adults and 70 percent of likely voters favor it. Again, Democrats (91%) are much more likely than independents (67%) and Republicans (46%) to be in favor. More than two in three across regions and demographic groups hold this view.

Proposition 13 Changes

Proposition 13, the 1978 ballot measure that limits both residential and commercial property tax rates, continues to be viewed positively. About six in ten Californians (61%) and likely voters (64%) feel that passing Proposition 13 turned out to be mostly a good thing for California, while one in four say it has mostly been a bad thing. Last March, a similar 57 percent of Californians said it has been a good thing, and a majority have held this view in periodic surveys dating back to May 2008.

Majorities across parties say Proposition 13 is a good thing, though Republicans are more likely than Democrats or independents to hold this view. Majorities across regions say it’s been a good thing (63% Inland Empire, 63% San Francisco Bay Area, 62% Orange/San Diego, 61% Central Valley, 57% Los Angeles). At least half across racial/ethnic groups hold this view, although Asian Americans (62%), whites (62%), and Latinos (59%) are more likely than African Americans (50%) to say it’s been a good thing. Majorities across age, education, and income groups say Proposition 13 has mostly been a good thing, and this perception increases with rising income. Notably, about three in four homeowners (73%)—compared to half of renters (49%)—say the landmark proposition has mostly been a good thing.

“Proposition 13 is the 1978 ballot measure that limits the property tax rate to 1 percent of assessed value at time of purchase and annual tax increases to no more than 2 percent until the property is sold. Overall, do you feel passing Proposition 13 turned out to be mostly a good thing for California or mostly a bad thing?”

A ballot measure eligible for the 2020 ballot would tax commercial properties according to their current market value but would not lift Proposition 13’s limits on residential property taxes—creating a “split roll” property tax system. The money raised by the initiative would go to local governments and schools. Californians are divided when asked about the general idea of commercial properties being taxed according to their current market value (47% favor, 43% oppose). Likely voters are similarly divided (49% favor, 43% oppose). Democrats are more likely than independents and far more likely than Republicans to favor this idea. Support across regions varies from a low of 44 percent in the Inland Empire to a high of 51 percent in the San Francisco Bay Area. African Americans (55%) are somewhat more likely than whites (48%), Asian Americans (47%), and Latinos (46%) to favor this proposal. Fewer than half across age groups are in favor.

Last January, a similar 46 percent of likely voters said that they were in favor of this proposal. In April 2018, we asked a similar question that specified that some of this split roll tax revenue would go to state funding for K–12 public schools, and 53 percent of likely voters and 61 percent of adults were in favor.

“Under Proposition 13, residential and commercial property taxes are both strictly limited. What do you think about having commercial properties taxed according to their current market value? Do you favor or oppose this proposal?”

Key Findings

- Three in ten Californians approve of President Trump’s job performance, while 34 percent approve of Congress. Twenty-five percent of Californians—a record low in PPIC surveys—think President Trump and Congress will be able to work together and accomplish a lot in the next year. (page 15)
- About half of Californians (48%) approve of House Speaker Pelosi. Thirty-two percent approve of House Minority Leader McCarthy, while about four in ten do not have an opinion of him yet. (page 16)
- Two in three Californians say that Democratic control of the US House of Representatives will lead to a lot (28%) or some (38%) change to the way things are going in the country. Three in ten say the country is headed in the right direction. (page 17)
- Sixty-four percent of Californians say Trump and Republicans in Congress were responsible for the federal government shutdown. Twenty-seven percent say the situation with illegal immigration at the border is a crisis. A majority of Californians (69%) oppose building a wall along the border with Mexico. (page 18)
- A majority of Californians (58%) are optimistic that Americans of different political views can come together and work out their differences. Forty-five percent of adults perceive race relations as having gotten worse in America over the last year. (page 19)

Approval Ratings of Federal Elected Officials

As President Trump begins his third year in office, just three in ten Californians and 36 percent of likely voters say they approve of the way that he is handling his job as president, while about two in three say they disapprove (67% adults, 62% likely voters). President Trump’s approval rating was similar when he first entered office in January 2017 (30% adults, 34% likely voters). Today, a strong majority of Republicans (77%) approve of President Trump, while solid majorities of Democrats (89%) and independents (60%) disapprove. Majorities across all regions disapprove of the way Donald Trump is handling his job, as do majorities across all racial/ethnic groups (96% African Americans, 75% Latinos, 64% Asian Americans, 59% whites). In a recent Gallup poll, 37 percent of adults nationwide approved of the president, while 59 percent disapproved.

As the 116th US Congress commences with the Democrats in control of the House of Representatives and the US Senate remaining under Republican control, only a third of Californians (34%) approve of the way Congress is handling its job. Approval of Congress is even lower among likely voters, with only 23 percent saying they approve. Approval of the US Congress was similar in December (29% adults, 20% likely voters) and lower last January (21% adults, 15% likely voters). Today, majorities across parties and regions disapprove of the way Congress is handling its job. Across racial/ethnic groups, Latinos (50%) and Asian Americans (41%) are more likely than African Americans (25%) and whites (21%) to approve of the way Congress is handling its job. In a recent Gallup poll, only 20 percent of adults nationwide approved of Congress, while 75 percent disapproved.

With the Democrats now controlling the House of Representatives, a record-low one in four Californians (25%) and even fewer likely voters (18%) say they think that President Trump and the US Congress will be able to work together and accomplish a lot in the next year. Californians held similar views in January 2018 (29% adults, 27% likely voters) but were more optimistic in January 2017, when President Trump first took office (50% adults, 55% likely voters). Today, majorities across parties do not think that the president and Congress will be able to work together and accomplish a lot in the coming year. Indeed, strong majorities across regions and demographic groups are pessimistic about the prospect of the president and Congress working together and accomplishing a lot in the next year.

California’s Congressional Leaders

Forty-eight percent of adults and 50 percent of likely voters approve of the way that House Speaker Nancy Pelosi is handling her job. Across parties, a majority of Democrats (77%) approve of Speaker Pelosi, and a majority of Republicans (81%) disapprove; independents are divided (45% approve, 49% disapprove). Regionally, those in the San Francisco Bay Area (55%) and Los Angeles (52%) are the most likely to approve of the way Speaker Pelosi is handling her job (44% Orange/San Diego, 43% Central Valley, 40% Inland Empire). Across racial/ethnic groups, African Americans (66%) are much more likely than Asian Americans (51%), Latinos (50%), and whites (45%) to approve of Speaker Pelosi. Women are slightly more likely than men to approve (51% to 45%) and the likelihood of approving of Speaker Pelosi increases with age. Speaker Pelosi’s approval rating was similar in March 2007 (52% adults, 53% likely voters), shortly after she became the first female Speaker of the House.

About three in ten adults (32%) and likely voters (28%) approve of the way that Minority Leader Kevin McCarthy is handling his job. Thirty percent of adults and 36 percent of likely voters disapprove of the minority leader, while about four in ten say they don’t know or haven’t heard enough to have an opinion. Across parties, a plurality of Republicans (44%) approve of Leader McCarthy, while a plurality of Democrats (43%) disapprove; independents are more divided (33% approve, 34% disapprove). About a third across regions approve of the way Leader McCarthy is handling his job (35% Orange/San Diego, 34% Central Valley, 31% Inland Empire, 31% Los Angeles, 31% San Francisco Bay Area). Across racial/ethnic groups, Latinos (40%) and Asian Americans (35%) are more likely than whites (26%) and African Americans (19%) to approve. Californians without a college education are somewhat more likely than those with at least some college to approve of the way Leader McCarthy is handling his job (38% to 28%). We have not asked about Leader McCarthy’s handling of his job in previous surveys.

State of the Nation

Following the November 2018 midterm elections, two in three adults (66%) think that the switch in control of the House of Representatives from Republicans to Democrats will lead to some (38%) or a lot of change (28%) in the way things are going in the country. Findings are similar among likely voters. Though majorities across parties expect at least some change, Democrats (81%) are far more likely than Republicans (58%) and independents (59%) to say the switch will change the way things are going in the country. Majorities across regions and demographic groups expect that the switch in control of the House of Representatives from Republicans to Democrats will lead to at least some change. In a November Pew Research Center poll, 72 percent of adults nationwide expected at least some change in the way things are going in the country after Democrats won back control of the House (21% a lot, 51% some, 21% not much, 6% not at all).

“As you may know, the Democratic Party won control of the US House of Representatives as a result of the midterm elections. How much do you think Democratic control of the House will change the way things are going in this country—a lot, some, not much, or not at all?”

Californians are pessimistic about the direction of the country, with only three in ten adults (30%) and likely voters (29%) saying things are generally going in the right direction in the United States. The belief that things in the United States are going in the right direction was similar in December 2017 (29% adults, 27% likely voters), but it was slightly higher in October 2017 (36% adults, 38% likely voters). Today, majorities of Republicans (57%) but far fewer independents (30%) and Democrats (15%) say that things in the United States are going in the right direction. Fewer than four in ten across regions say things are going in the right direction, with those in the Central Valley (38%) the most likely to hold this view (29% Inland Empire, 29% San Francisco Bay Area, 28% Los Angeles, 28% Orange/San Diego). Across racial/ethnic groups, African Americans (6%) are far less likely than other groups to say things in the United States are going in the right direction (30% whites, 32% Latinos, 37% Asian Americans).

Partial Government Shutdown

Sixty-four percent of Californians say that President Trump and Republicans in Congress were mainly responsible for the shutdown, while 24 percent say Democrats in Congress were mainly responsible. We began interviewing survey respondents on January 20 and thus were able to interview Californians during and after the shutdown. The findings were similar during the shutdown (63% Trump and Republicans, 26% Democrats) and once it had ended (66% Trump and Republicans, 23% Democrats). Overall, nearly nine in ten Democrats blame Trump and Republicans in Congress, while seven in ten Republicans blame Democrats in Congress. Half of independents think Trump and Republicans were responsible (33% say Democrats). Whites are the least likely across racial/ethnic groups to say Trump and Republicans were responsible. The share saying Trump and Republicans were responsible declines with rising age and income, and is higher among women than men. In a January ABC/Washington Post poll, 53 percent of adults nationwide blamed Trump and congressional Republicans (29% blamed Democrats).

“As you may know, the federal government was partially shut down because Donald Trump and Republicans in Congress and Democrats in Congress could not agree on laws about border security. *Question wording was changed on January 25. For complete question text, see p. 26.

When asked about the situation with illegal immigration across the US-Mexico border, 27 percent of Californians call it a crisis, 45 percent say it is a serious problem but not a crisis, and 27 percent say it is not a serious problem. Fifty-eight percent of Republicans call the situation a crisis, compared to just 14 percent of Democrats and 28 percent of independents. Across regions and demographic groups, no more than one in three Californians say the situation is a crisis. Similar shares of adults nationwide (24%) called the situation a crisis in the January ABC/Washington Post poll.

“Do you think the situation with illegal immigration across the US-Mexico border is currently a crisis, a serious problem but not a crisis, or not a serious problem?”

When asked about building a wall along the entire border with Mexico, most Californians (69%) are opposed (28% favor). In seven periodic surveys dating back to May 2016, fewer than three in ten have favored building a wall. Today, three in four Republicans are in favor, but support among other partisans and across regions and demographic groups fails to eclipse 40 percent. In a January CNN poll, 56 percent of adults nationwide opposed the wall and 39 percent were in favor.

Political and Racial Divisions

In a rancorous political environment and on the heels of a historic government shutdown, most Californians (58%) continue to feel optimistic that Americans of different political views can still come together and work out their differences (40% pessimistic). Findings were nearly identical in September 2017 (56% optimistic, 40% pessimistic).

About half of Democrats, Republicans, and independents are optimistic, as are about six in ten residents across regions (56% Inland Empire, 57% Los Angeles, 57% San Francisco Bay Area, 58% Orange/San Diego, 61% Central Valley). Optimism varies across racial/ethnic groups, with African Americans and Latinos more optimistic than Asian Americans and whites. Optimism declines as educational attainment and household income increases.

“These days, do you feel optimistic or pessimistic that Americans of different political views can still come together and work out their differences?”

When it comes to race relations in the United States today, a plurality of Californians say things are worse than they were a year ago, while a third say things are about the same and one in five say things are better than they were a year ago. In September 2017, findings were similar (14% better, 35% about the same, 49% worse).

Most Democrats and nearly half of independents say race relations are worse today, while a plurality of Republicans say they are about the same as a year ago. Notably, two in three African Americans and pluralities of Latinos, whites, and Asian Americans say that race relations in the United States are worse than they were a year ago. The belief that race relations are worse than they were a year ago is also held by pluralities across regions. Women (54%) are much more likely than men (35%) to say that things are worse. Pluralities across age, education, and income groups say things are worse off than they were a year ago.

“What is your opinion with regard to race relations in the United States today? Would you say things are better, about the same, or worse than they were a year ago?”

Methodology

The PPIC Statewide Survey is directed by Mark Baldassare, president and CEO and survey director at the Public Policy Institute of California, with assistance from survey research associate Alyssa Dykman, project manager for this survey, associate survey director Dean Bonner, and survey research associate Lunna Lopes. The Californians and Their Government is supported with funding from the James Irvine Foundation and the PPIC Donor Circle. The PPIC Statewide Survey invites input, comments, and suggestions from policy and public opinion experts and from its own advisory committee, but survey methods, questions, and content are determined solely by PPIC's survey team.

Findings in this report are based on a survey of 1,707 California adult residents, including 1,195 interviewed on cell phones and 512 interviewed on landline telephones. Interviews took an average of 18 minutes to complete. Interviewing took place on weekend days and weekday nights from January 20–29, 2019.

Cell phone interviews were conducted using a computer-generated random sample of cell phone numbers. All cell phone numbers with California area codes were eligible for selection. Once a cell phone user was reached, it was verified that this person was age 18 or older, a resident of California, and in a safe place to continue the survey (e.g., not driving). Cell phone respondents were offered a small reimbursement to help defray the cost of the call. Cell phone interviews were conducted with adults who have cell phone service only and with those who have both cell phone and landline service in the household.

Landline interviews were conducted using a computer-generated random sample of telephone numbers that ensured that both listed and unlisted numbers were called. All landline telephone exchanges in California were eligible for selection. Once a household was reached, an adult respondent (age 18 or older) was randomly chosen for interviewing using the "last birthday method" to avoid biases in age and gender.

For both cell phones and landlines, telephone numbers were called as many as eight times. When no contact with an individual was made, calls to a number were limited to six. Also, to increase our ability to interview Asian American adults, we made up to three additional calls to phone numbers estimated by Survey Sampling International as likely to be associated with Asian American individuals.

Live landline and cell phone interviews were conducted by Abt Associates in English and Spanish, according to respondents' preferences. Accent on Languages, Inc., translated new survey questions into Spanish, with assistance from Renatta DeFever.

Abt Associates uses the US Census Bureau's 2012–2016 American Community Survey's (ACS) Public Use Microdata Series for California (with regional coding information from the University of Minnesota's Integrated Public Use Microdata Series for California) to compare certain demographic characteristics of the survey sample—region, age, gender, race/ethnicity, and education—with the characteristics of California's adult population. The survey sample was closely comparable to the ACS figures. To estimate landline and cell phone service in California, Abt Associates used 2016 state-level estimates released by the National Center for Health Statistics—which used data from the National Health Interview Survey (NHIS) and the ACS. The estimates for California were then compared against landline and cell phone service reported in this survey. We also used voter registration data from the California Secretary of State to compare the party registration of registered voters in our sample to party registration statewide. The landline and cell phone samples were then integrated using a frame integration weight, while sample balancing adjusted for differences across regional, age, gender, race/ethnicity, education, telephone service, and party registration groups.

The sampling error, taking design effects from weighting into consideration, is  $\pm 3.3$  percent at the 95 percent confidence level for the total unweighted sample of 1,707 adults. This means that 95 times out of 100, the results will be within 3.3 percentage points of what they would be if all adults in California were interviewed. The sampling error for unweighted subgroups is larger: for the 1,440 registered voters, the sampling error is  $\pm 3.5$  percent; for the 1,154 likely voters, it is  $\pm 4.0$  percent. Sampling error is only one type of error to which surveys are subject. Results may also be affected by factors such as question wording, question order, and survey timing.

We present results for five geographic regions, accounting for approximately 90 percent of the state population. "Central Valley" includes Butte, Colusa, El Dorado, Fresno, Glenn, Kern, Kings, Madera, Merced, Placer, Sacramento, San Joaquin, Shasta, Stanislaus, Sutter, Tehama, Tulare, Yolo, and Yuba Counties. "San Francisco Bay Area" includes Alameda, Contra Costa, Marin, Napa, San Francisco, San Mateo, Santa Clara, Solano, and Sonoma Counties. "Los Angeles" refers to Los Angeles County, "Inland Empire" refers to Riverside and San Bernardino Counties, and "Orange/San Diego" refers to Orange and San Diego Counties. Residents of other geographic areas are included in the results reported for all adults, registered voters, and likely voters, but sample sizes for these less populous areas are not large enough to report separately.

We present results for non-Hispanic whites, who account for 42 percent of the state's adult population, and also for Latinos, who account for about a third of the state's adult population and constitute one of the fastest-growing voter groups. We also present results for non-Hispanic Asian Americans, who make up about 15 percent of the state's adult population, and non-Hispanic African Americans, who comprise about 6 percent. Results for other racial/ethnic groups—such as Native Americans—are included in the results reported for all adults, registered voters, and likely voters, but sample sizes are not large enough for separate analysis. Results for African American and Asian American likely voters are combined with those of other racial/ethnic groups because sample sizes for African American and Asian American likely voters are too small for separate analysis. We compare the opinions of those who report they are registered Democrats, registered Republicans, and decline-to-state or independent voters; the results for those who say they are registered to vote in other parties are not large enough for separate analysis. We also analyze the responses of likely voters—so designated per their responses to survey questions about voter registration, previous election participation, intentions to vote this year, attention to election news, and current interest in politics.

The percentages presented in the report tables and in the questionnaire may not add to 100 due to rounding.

We compare current PPIC Statewide Survey results to those in our earlier surveys and to those in national surveys by ABC/Washington Post, CNN, Gallup, and the Pew Research Center. Additional details about our methodology can be found at www.ppic.org/wp-content/uploads/SurveyMethodology.pdf and are available upon request through surveys@ppic.org.
